AOC 2212Ph Widescreen LCD Monitor Awarded "Editors' Choice" by NZ PC World Magazine (May 2008)

Sydney, Australia (4 June 2008) – Although the 2212Ph, a 22-inch widescreen LCD monitor, is a "previous generation" model from AOC (with an array of newer models recently showcased at CeBIT in Sydney), it still garnered a 9.5 score and Editors' Choice Award in a comparative test of widescreen monitors published in the May 2008 issue.

The review was sprinkled with enthusiastic turns of phrase, including "all aces", "a perfect all-rounder", "great features", "an absolute steal", "a great monitor", "a perfect setup", "great output", "very enjoyable", "great display performance" and "it wins hands down".

Competing products included models from LG, Philips and Samsung. As the "house brand" of TPV, the world's largest manufacturer of computer monitors for many years, AOC has a brand awareness that belies its substantial origins. Such gushing praise against a trio of illustrious global household names must surely be welcome at AOC.

More exact terms included "the slimmest of all the monitors tested", "the only monitor we tested that had an HDMI input" and "the least amount of backlight bleeding of all the monitors we tested".

Product features highlighted in the review include:

- Low street price
- Built-in stereo speakers (3W each)
- Slim body (13mm)
- HDMI, DVI-D, VGA, Component inputs with "source select" button
- HD-compatible display

The monitors in the comparative review (with their overall scores) were: AOC 2212Ph (9.5), LG Flatron 2252TQ (8.5), Philips 220BW8 (8.0), Samsung SyncMaster 225UW (7.5) and Viewsonic VP2250WB (8.5).
